FAIR HOUSING IS YOUR RIGHT

ACCESSIBLE HOUSING FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES

- Housing providers and other responsible parties are required to make reasonable accommodations in policies and/or practices that allow a person with a disability an equal opportunity to use their housing, such as requesting reserved parking.
- Tenants with disabilities can also request reasonable modifications of the structure of the existing premises to enjoy their housing, such as requesting grab bars in the bathroom

BEWARE

- Steering prevents community members from having their full range of housing options.
- Advertisements, phrases or comments made by landlords, realtors or agents such as “perfect for empty nesters,” or “near Catholic schools,” may suggest that some people are not welcome or others are more desirable.

WHAT DOES UNLAWFUL DISCRIMINATION IN HOUSING LOOK LIKE?

- Being told a home is rented when it is still available because the housing provider doesn't want to rent to someone of the applicant's race.
- Being given different terms and conditions for sale or rental of a property due to a person having a disability.
- Being charged a fee for service or support animals.
- Refusal of housing because of a household's national origin.
- Your family being refused rental housing because of children under the age of 18.
- Denial of a request for closer parking that is necessary due to a disability
- Denial of maintenance requests because of age.
- Being evicted due to your sexuality
- Not being provided the same services as other tenants in retaliation for filing a discrimination complaint.
- Denial of a loan request because of an applicant's sex.

If any of these situations have happened to you, you may have experienced housing discrimination.
